Karadzic's New Line: Peace and Rebuilding Leader of Bosnian Serbs Speaks Of Reconciliation With Muslims

By John F. Burns

New York Tunes Service PALE. Bosnia-Herzegovina --- Radovan Karadzic, the leader of the Serhian nationalists who have seized 70 percent of the country, has said that his forces consider the war in Bosnia to be over and has promised that in Bosnia to be over and has promised that his troops will not renew their attacks on Sarajevo, the capital, and other strongholds of the Muslim-led government. Mr. Karadzic snid in an interview that the ethnic Serbian leadership planned to turn its efforts instead to rebuilding the shattered economy of the parts of Bosnia they control and mending relations with Bosnian Mus-lime lims. "We are of the same blood, we are all Slavs," he said, speaking of Serbs and Mus-lims, at the center of the 18-month-old war in which at least 200,000 people are estimated to have died, mostly Muslims killed by Serbian forces. More than a million Muslims have also been driven from their homes in "ethnic eleansing" campaigns by Serbian troops.

"We don't want any more territory," the political leader of the Bosnian Serbs said. "We bave enough already." Mr. Karadzie, a 48-year-old psychiatrist from Sarajevo, who serves as president of the autonomous republic Serbs have declared on Bosnian territory, spoke at his office in this mountain town that is the Serbs' military headquarters. His remarks were a shift in tone - toward a policy that emphasized a need for Serbs and Muslims to rebuild at least something of the common life they shared before the war,

Last month, after Serbian leaders accepted an international peace plan that would partition Bosnia into separate ethnic republics for Serbs, Muslims and Croats, Mr. Karadzic and other leading Serbian officials in Bosnia said the Serbs would wage a "war to the finish" against Muslims if the Bosnian government rejected the plan.

The Bosnian parliament rejected it any-way, saying that it legitimized "ethnic cleans-ing" and gave Muslims too little territory — 30 percent of Bosnia — compared with the 44 percent of the population that Muslims rep-resented in Bosnia before the war.

But in the interview, Mr. Karadzic repudiated those earlier statements, including threats by Serbian commanders to renew ar-tillery bombardments to flatten Sarajevo. "No. no, we will never do that," he said.

"We don't intend to resume the war. We don't intend to resume the war. We don't intend to punish the Muslims because they didn't sign. We don't intend to take territory we consider Muslim. Serbs are not fighting now. For us, the war is finished." In remarks that seemed aimed at encouraging reservations in Washington, about, the part of a peace plan that would involve send-ing a 50,000-man North Atlantic Treaty force here to put the accord into effect, including 25,000 Americans, Mr. Karadzic said the Serbian leadership saw no need for a big peace force, only for a small deployment of international military observers. "If we agree on the borders," he said. "what need would we bave for foreign troops?" Witbout offering any explicit apology for the actions of Serbian forces, whose brutality against Muslims has been widely condemied by international buman rights groups, Mr. Karadzic appeared to be laying the ground for reconciliation with Muslims by saying

Mogadishu Is Calmer After Aidid Proclaims Unilateral Cease-Fire

By Paul F. Horvitz

International Herald Tribune WASHINGTON --- The United States putwASHINGTON — The United States pur-sued a two-pronged strategy Sunday to extri-cate itself from Somalia, beginning a series of diplomatic encounters with clan leaders in Mogadishu but preparing to keep the military pressure on Mohammed Farrah Aidid, the one warlord who is not on the U.S. diplomatic agenda. U.S. officials stressed Sunday that their aim was to have African leaders create a political agreement among all the major clans and politiagreement among an the major cans and post-cal figures in Somalia to keep humanitarian aid flowing and not to use food as a weapon to settle their power struggles. They also said they hoped neighboring Afri-can states would create a commission to assess blame for the killings in Mogadishu of Paki-stani and U.S. peacekeeping troops over the past few months

In short, said Secretary of State Warren M. Christopher, "we're going to try to use the African leaders' assistance to provide an African solution to what is really an African proh-

Mogadishu, meanwhile, had one of its quiet-est nights in four months afer General Aidid called a unilateral truce in his guerrilla war against U.S. and UN peacekeepers.

Despite President Bill Clinton's effort in a speech Thursday to elarify U.S. policy on Somalia, key congressional leaders expressed doubts about the policy in televised interviews Sunday.

Sam Nunn, the Georgia Democrat who beads the Senate Armed Services Committee. and Boh Dole of Kansas, the Senate Republican leader, both disagreed with Mr. Clinton's decision to set a firm date for the withdrawal of U.S. troops, And both also expressed serious doubts, given the Somalia experience, about the possibility of a major U.S. involvement in peacekeeping in Bosnia and Haiti. Mr. Dole said he did not foresee any U.S. forces in Bosnia unless Mr. Clinton could make a more convincing case than he has already put forth. Robert B. Oakley, the U.S. special envoy to the region, arrived in Mogadishu on Sunday and met with UN officials before pursuing a series of meetings with Somali clan chiefs. At same time, U.S. armored vehicles and the first contingent of U.S. troop reinforcements began landing in the Somali capital. General Aidid, whose well-armed guerrilla fighters have had several bloody clashes with UN and U.S. forces, eventually will have to join in the political arrangements under way if be wants to be part of Somalia's political future, Secretary of Defense Les Aspin said Sunday.

ning political comebacks Sunday night when his Panhellenic Socialist Movement surged decisively back to power with an absolute majority in national elections.

With 40 percent of the votes counted, the aging and ailing Mr. Papandreop had secured 46 percent of the hallot, according to official computer projections. Under new electioo rules, the ballot was enough to give Mr. Papan-dreou 167 seats in the 300-seat parliament and push the conservative Constantine Mitsotakis from power.

Just five hours after the polls closed, Mr. Mitsotakis went on national television to concede defeat.

"The election has been decided," be said, "The Greek people chose PASOK, which will have its own government with the clear major-ity in parliament." PASOK is the Greek acronym for Mr. Papandreou's party. The outcome left Mr. Mitsotakis with only 116 seats, according to computer projections, Mitsotakis said on television that he would prepare for new party elections, possibly to choose a new leader of his New Democracy Party.

It was an ambiguous victory since it drew as much on Mr. Mitsotakis's unpopularity after three years of harsh austerity measures as it did on the popularity of Mr. Papandreou among Greece's 8 million voters, who are hurting from price increases and reduced social benefits.

This is a negative vote for the lesser of two evils," said an analyst and commentator, John Loulis.

"We made great strides ahead to improve the economy but apparently our policy was not understood by the electorate," said Miluades Evert, a former Athens mayor who is likely to run for the New Democracy leadership if Mr Mitsotakis keeps his promise to retire. The dramatic reversal had repercussions be-

Good Intentions, but They Went Astray

By Thomas L. Friedman New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - How did an operation that began with U.S. soldiers feeding starving Somalis wind up with an American soldier's corpse being dragged through the streets of Mogadishu by Somalis starving only for revenge?

The answer is a tangled web of good inten-tions gone awry, political miscalculations and military blunders. They add up to a chilling object lesson for U.S. engagement in the post-Cold War world.

But the Somalia story is not over. President

Bill Clinton made that clear in his address to the nation last week when, in response to mounting U.S. casualties and growing domestic opposition to the U.S. involvement there, he sounced a doubling of U.S. ground forces and a March 31 deadline for their complete withdrawal.

There is a lot riding on how that deadline is met. If a measure of normality can be restored and Somalia becomes an example of a reasonably successful bumanitarian relief operation, there may be hope for other failed states desperately in need of outside help. But if Somalia becomes the Beirut or Vietnam of the 1990s, it could have a far-reaching impact. Taken on its own, this country on the Horn of Africa is irrelevant to vital U.S. interests. But there are other Somalias, each representing no threat to vital American interests. But what if they are all ignored - Somalia, Bosnia, Georgia, Nagorno-Karabakh and Haiti and who knows how many to come?

One answer is that the United States could wake up 10 years from now and discover that

Whether to include him or not in Somalia's political discussions will be up to African leaders, Mr. Aspin said, among them the leaders of Eritrea, Ethiopia and Kenya.

Mr. Aspin expressed confidence that these arrangements could be forged within the next six months and that General Aidid could gain nothing by biding his time until March 31, the date Mr. Clinton has set for a withdrawal of U.S. forces.

Japan's Bullet Train Takes Some Flak

By Andrew Pollack

TOKYO - Sleek, speedy and almost always on time, the bullet train has stood for three decades as a symbol of Japan's reputation for advanced technology and efficiency. But the newest and fastest generation of the bullet train is shooting holes in that reputation.

The new Nozomi train, whose name means "hope," has been plagued by breakdowns and defects since it went into service a year and a half ago. Bolts have fallen out, welds and win-dows have cracked, doors have failed to close and a control stick broke off in a driver's hand.

oped the new train, placed an advertisement in The New York Times, calling the train unsafe train. and asking Americans to urge the railroad to suspend what an analyst called "test-runs with passengers."

The advertisement also said that drivers were told they could not slow down the train from 167 miles per hour (270 kilometers per hour) even if they feared danger, and that the compaoy dismissed workers who tried to protest.

Officials of J.R. Central, as the company is usually called, said the failures were mainly minor "teething prohlems" that are unavoidable with a new product. They said many of the defects were caught by the railroad's own inspections before they affected service.

The first bullet train, in 1964, suffered worse initial problems, they said, but 29 years and more than 3.4 billion passengers later, there has never been a fatal accident involving a bullet tional section of J.R. Central's corporate planning division, said the advertisement was "propaganda" from a union that represents only 5 percent of the workers and is boping to gain power. He said the only workers dismissed were those who had injured supervisors when they broke into a depot in Osaka during a protest in March.

EC Won't Try To Fix Broken Currency Grid

By Tom Buerkle International Nerald Tribune

GENVAL, Belgium - Three weeks ago, Prime Minister John Major of Britain threw down the gauntlet to his European Community partners by threatening a showdown if they tried to put Europe's broken currency grid back together again. There isn't going to be a showdown. The Community's top economic and monetary officials agreed at a weekend meeting in this Brussels suburb to forget about trying to revive the ught trading constraints of the exchange-rate mechanism, which were blown apart by Europe's last currency crisis in early August.

"It would not be advisable now to fix a timetable for a return to narrow margins" in the mechanism, said Philippe Maystadt, the finance minister of Belgium, which holds the EC presidency.

But the officials dismissed any suggestion that giving up on the mechanism for now would allow them to take new measures to revive the European economy, such as cutting interest rates significantly. Lower rates remain the best single remedy for ending the recession, they said, but Europe will have to keep on waiting for the lead of the Bundesbank in getting there.

It was a reaffirmation of the status quo rather than a new direction that might offer hope to Europe's growing army of unemployed. The centerpiece of policy-making remains conver-gence, the EC term for the Holy Grail of low inflation and low budget deficits enshrined in the Maastricht Treaty on European Union.

"The reduction of public deficits is an essential element" for getting interest rates down, Mr. Maystadt said.

The result, conceded Jacques Delors, the president of the EC Commission, is that "the transition to growth risks being long."

The meeting showed that despite previous complaints by Mr. Delors and various French and Belgian politicians blaming Europe's currency woes on speculators and Anglo-Saxon conspirators. European economic policy will

Q. What are your plans for energy without their subsidies?

Serget Vasiliev is director of the economic policy staff of the Council of Ministers of Russia. He is closely allied with the architect of economic reform efforts, Yegor T. Gaidar. In London recently to lecture at the London School of Economics, he spoke with Erik Ipsen of the International Herald Tribune.

Q. Parliament has been commonly seen in the West as a major obstacle to economie reform in Russia. Do vou share that view?

A. Certainly it was one of the major obstacles, especially in recent months. The purpose of parliamentary action became to overthrow the government. They were trying to destroy the government by destroying the economy.

There were also a lot of anti-stabilization measures. There is for example a notorious law that proposes a terribly high subsidization of grain and export quotas. It was completely invented by the agrarian lohby and was a real disaster for the budget.

Q. How was the situation changed by dissolving parliament? A. The situation changed rather sharply. First, no one thinks about the econonow or about lobbying. Activity now will be geared toward the election campaign not toward lobbying or economics.

It is just that their real energy costs are low due to restrictions on energy exports which keeps energy supplies plenuful and chesp.

Q. But if you have industries that are already price uncompetitive won't that just make it worse?

A. Only the market can show which industries are uncompetitive. Also we can protect some of them by increasing import barriers and tariffs. Import barriers are quite low.

O. The central bank has also been cited as an obstacle to reform. Is that still the Case.

A. No. the central bank is now subject to the government, not parliament. The central bank was quite cooperative during the summer following the referendum. It increased interest rates drastically and regularly -- from 100 percent to 170 percent. The biggest problems we now have are with the budget, not with credit.

Q. Much aid has been promised to Russia but little of it actually delivered?

A. I must say Russia does not need a lot of aid. It really needs to reschedule its debts because the amount Russia has to pay cannot be paid by a country in reform.

> O. What is the role of foreign governments?

A. The major part of aid we got last year was bilateral credits, which I would say are more useful for donors selling their goods to Russia than they are to us. Q. What about loans from the Internauonal Monetary Fund?

A. Poliocally I think these monies are very important, for reformers at least. It is a good argument in favor of continuing reforms. But I think that, for example, the first tranche of a recent IMF loan was used to cover the budget deficit. It wasn't used to resolve long term problems of Russia. It has smoothed problems of our deficit in the summer but now we have the same problems except bigger. I think that the IMF is too soft toward Russia. Q. How so?

A. No one in the government thinks of these agreements as obligatory. Money should be exchanged for real actions, not for promises, not for programs.

U.K. Demands Guarantee From IRA DUBLIN (NYT) - The controversy over a peace initiative for Ulster accelerated Sunday, after the British secretary for the north. Sir Patrick Mayhew, explained the conditions under which he would negotiate with with Sian Fein, the political wing of the outlawed Irish Republican Army, Sir Patrick, in the first elaboration of British policy on the initiative since it won the approval last Thursday of the Irish prime munister. Alben Reynolds, said only an unconditional guarantee from the IRA that its campaign of violence had ended would lead to a negotiating role for Sinn Fein. A temporary cease-fire would not suffice, he said.

His statement, in an interview on BBC radio, was designed to reassure Protestant leaders in Northern Ireland that London was not preparing to undermine their desire to remain part of Britain. It also appeared to spell out what Prime Minister John Major of Britain meant when he said Friday that "No government that I lead will negotiate with these who perpetrate or those who support the use of violence."

Poll Reveals Xenophobia in Tokyo

TOKYO (AFP) - Most Tokyo residents are senophohic, have a poor impression of foreigners living in the Japanese capital and are concerned about their growing numbers, according to a survey published Sunday. The study, published in the Mainchi Shimhun, was carried out by the Tokyo city government among 3,000 residents of three districts in the capital with high concentrations of foreigners. Respondents complained that foreigners did not respect Japanese rules and habits, had bad manners and congregated in large groups.

Without giving the exact percentage of respondents hostike to foreigners, the Mainichi said two-thirds of those questioned had opposed an increase in the 1.3 million-strong foreign population. Authorities say 290,000 foreigners are in the country illegally, many of them in the construction industry.

Yeltsin Revives Delayed Trip to Japan, but Is Now the Time?

Tuesday, in a far more serious accident than any on the Nozomi, a driverless, computer-controlled train in Osaka ran past its last sta-tion and crashed into a barrier, injuring about 200 people.

The train, with a lightweight aluminum alloy body, was put into service in March 1992 between Tokyo and Osaka. From the start, there have been problems:

• In May 1992, a bolt near a motor came loose and a gearbox fell onto the track, stopping the train for more than four hours and forcing the delay or cancellation of more than 100 other trains. Investigators found that the bolt had been coated with rust-preventing paint and inserted into place while still wet. The railroad bad to replace 2.400 bolts with unpainted ones. • In April of this year, an accelerator control stick broke off in a driver's hand because the bolt holding it was shorter than it should have been. J.R. officials said the train could still be operated without the stick.

 Io August. a maintenance worker failed to insert one of two pins that hold the structure that connects the train to overhead electric power lines. The train made it all the way from Hiroshima to Tokyo without the pin. But as the train was pulling into a depot after the passengers had departed, the structure on top of the train fell off and the train lost power. • Last week, J.R. Central said it would replace 99 faulty axle boxes.

When Taxes Cover Pet Science Projects 'Earmarked' Academic Funds Often Go to Inefficient Use

planes here is a small beige aviation building that is angering scientists, federal agencies and Vice President Al Gore

The Federal Aviation Administration - despite begging not to have to spend government money this way - must pay $6.8 million to remodel it. Scientists rant that this shows how American scientific research increasingly depends not on what you know, but which member of Congress you know.

member of Congress you know. Mr. Gore railed against the ex-penditure in his report on govern-ment waste. His recommendation:

Nonetheless, a taxpayer-funded Airway Science Program for Uni-versity of Alaska students will soon be taught inside the huilding, thanks to a group of powerful members of Congress, who increasingly "earmark" academic grants. "It's robbery," said Joe B. Wyatt, chancellor of Vanderbilt University and chairman of the Association of American Universities. "I don't know what else to call it. There is a new recognition among scientists that this is not free money going to these oridnight, earmarked proj-ects," he said, adding, "It's money coming right out of competitive sci-ence funding."

Earmarked projects win approv-al not by a public evaluation of their menus but by an influential member of Congress adding a sentence or two to the fine print of a speoding bill. Often, only the sponsor knows the funding is in the bill when Congress approves it, that is, until it is time for the ground-breakiog ceremony back bome. A small cabal of House and Senate members oo the appropriations committees, who have the best ac-cess to changing the fine print of spending bills, are responsible for most of the money that is spent this way.

Federal academic grants are intended to advance scholarly research, but when they are approved through carmarking, they can fund such parochial projects as a new college program in Alaska, a food marketing center in Pennsylvania and a planetarium for a small town in Michigan.

used earmarking, or "pork poli-tics." to secure highways, bridges ations bill. That then diminishes the agency's pool of available moncy for projects that won approval on their merits.

"It's a good use of money for the nation," Mr. Stevens said of the $6.8 million to get a new Airway Science Program off the ground in his state

But outside auditors conclude that it is not. In May, the Depart-ment of Transportation's inspector-general said the program, already located at 37 schools, has "not achieved its objective." It was started in 1982, fullowing the air traffic controllers' strike, to bring well-trained youth to the field.

The inspector-general's office found that between 1983 and 1989, the aviation agency hired more than 8,000 people, only 41 of them Airway Science graduates.

That means that the government, which has so far spent more than $100 million on the program na-tionally, paid more than $2 million to train each person it hired, said Raymond J. DeCarli, assistant inspector general for auditing.

Representative George E. Brown Jr., Democrat of California and chairman of the Committee on Science, Space and Technology, has threatened a showdown on the House floor unless 25 earmarked projects, ranging from $75,000 to $60 million each, were forced to undergo peer review.

In a signal that he means to make colleges that take the projects uncomfortable, too, Mr. Brown called officials to Washington last month from Tufts and Columbia universities. Both schools pay a lobbying firm to help them get earmarks, making it more difficult to pinpoint which congressional member worked behind the scenes for the school.

Mr. Brown estimated that 170 of the nation's more than 4,000 twoand four-year colleges have received carmarked funds.

"What do they have in com-mon?" he asked. "They all have friends in high places."

Some schools, including Vanderbilt. Cornell and Harvard, reject projects funded by earmarking. Some members of Congress do not go near them, either.

Bill Clinton always "had a tremendous learning curve," said Mark L Soler. "It was a good thing, because he wasn't the most diligent student."

A lover of sentimental reunions, President Clinton joined one this weekend as he made his first trip since winning the White House to the ivied quadrangle of Yale Law School. At a reunion of Yale Law '73, he received an award and mingled with 125 former classmates who regard him with admiration, affection and the mild annoyance that comes namurally when somebody gets the job you've craved for

"Everybody in the class wanted that job, and so far only one of us — or one-and-a-half — has got it," says Peter V. Baugher, a Chicago lawyer, referring to Mr. Clinton and his wife, Hillary, also a Yale Law graduate. "Of course, I'm perfectly happy where I am. But I would also accept an honest draft to the White House." (LAT)

Iran-Contra Affair Makes North Millionaire

WASHINGTON - The notoriety that Oliver L. North gained as a White Honse aide during the Iran-contra scandal has made him a millionaire, according to financial disclosure forms that be filed last week as a U.S. Senate candidate.

Mr. North has received about $2 million in persooal income in the last 21 months, the federal records show, with most of the money coming from a book and lectures in which be tells his side of the armsfor-hostages deal that rocked the Reagan administration. The disclo-sure shows that Mr. North took in about $1.7 million in book royalties and speaking fees since January of last year, by far his largest source

Mr. North, a Virginia Republican, was required to disclose his personal finances because he filed papers entering the Senate race last month. He is being opposed for the Republican comination by the former Reagan administration budget director, James C. Miller. The Senate seat is beld by the Democrat Charles S. Robb. (WP)

Democratic Committee Challenges Lobbyists

WASHINGTON - David Wilhelm, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, has warned five major lobbying organizations that the party will do battle with them if they challenge Mr. Clinton's economic, health-care or gun-control agendas. In an unusual shift from the national committee's traditional cheerleader role, Mr. Wilhelm told committee members meeting here that the National Rifle Association, the Christian Coalition, the Health Insurance Association of America, Citizens for a Sound Economy "and their oil-related allies are some pretty tough custom-ers," but that if they attack the Clinton program, "we'll hit them

Mr. Wilhelm also said the Democratic National Committee was prepared to take on one of the most influential small-business lobbics, the National Federation of Independent Business: "We're going to fight to give small husiness a better deal oo health care. And if the NFIB wants to fight it like they fought Medicare, we'll meet them io the middle of the ring."

Watchdog Unit Skeptical of Clinton Cost Cuts

WASHINGTON - The General Accounting Office has concluded that President Bill Clinton's February executive order to reduce administrative waste and improve agency productivity would at best have a modest effect on spending and might do more harm than good to the quality of government.

Taking aim at the president's goal of a 14 percent across-the-board cut in government administrative costs over the next four years, the agency said in a draft report that such reductions were "blunt instruments, indiscriminately affecting both efficiently managed pro-grams and wasteful activities,"

As for the administration's assertions that its planned crackdown oo government overhead costs would result in more than $11 billion in savings over five years, the report suggests that the policy would barely put a nick io the federal deficit.

The report adds to a growing chorus of criticism of Mr. Clintoo's executive order, which some dismiss as political window dressing that fails to address the root causes of budget problems. (WP)

One of the reasons the United States excels in academic research, scholars say, is that the money for it is awarded in a peer review process. Under peer review, the agency spending the money selects a panel of independent experts to evaluate a proposal. The panel looks at the proposal's merits and the qualifications of those proposing it.

This never occurs in carmarking. Rather, as in this case, Senator Ted Stevens, Republican of Alaska, simply makes certain that $6.8 mil-lion is set aside for the Alaska Air-Aviation Administration appropri-

Washington Post Service WASHINGTON — Another American spacecraft has disappeared. A $228 million Landsat 6 satellite, launched last week, has been declared missing after a succession of mistaken reports that it was in the wrong orbit, or in the right orbit but not communicating. The object being tracked turned out to be a piece of space junk, officials said.

As for the satellite, "We don't know where it is," said Pat Viets of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, which manages the project.

The Earth observation satellite was launched at Vandenberg Air Force Base in California atop a converted air force ICBM rocket. It apparently separated successfully but has not been heard from since.

INTERNATIONAL HERALD TRIBUNE, MONDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1993

LESSON: From Good Intentions to Military Blunders

Continued from Page 1 world has diplomate cancer a critical mass of failed states, metastasizing in a cycle of violence and underdevelopment and sapping the international system.

That is what makes learning the essons of Somalia so urgent. Perhaps the most important is that there is rarely such a thing as simple bumanitarian intervention. Hnmanitarian crises, save for natural disasters, almost always have political roots that must be addressed. Somalia was short of food not because of bad rains, but because of bad reigns - a succession of venal warlords whose infighting after the 1991 overthrow of the dictator Mohammed Siad Barre disrupted food distribution. In the long run, it will be impossible for the Somalia operation to succeed without a working government. The Reagan administration learned this the hard way in Lebanon, the Bush administration igpored it when it sent U.S. troops to Somalia in December, and the Clinton administration, which inherited the operation, has been only slowly catching on. In such cases, humanitarian intervention has to be accompanied by a division of diplomats with blueprints for political reconstruction.

If it is true that humanitarian intervention and nation-building go hand-in-hand, the question be-comes: Does the United States have the will, the wallet and the wiles to make it work?

The question of wiles arises be-cause when the United States enters a country with no political center and no functioning government, it immediately becomes a faction. U.S. troops in Somalia saw themselves as the Red Cross, but the local political leaders effectively viewed them as the Clinton clan, or, as the Lebanese called the Marine peacekeepers in Beirut in 1982, "the international militia."

The Clioton clan had three choices in Somalia: to ally itself with another clan; to try to take over the whole country itself, or to try to broker a power-sharing agreement among other clans. The Americans stumbled back and forth among all three options, sometimes aligning themselves against the warlord Mohammed Farrah Aidid, sometimes brokering, deals, sometimes leaving Somalis with the impression that the United States would try to run the country. Thinking like a clan leader docs not come naturally to the U.S. statesman. This role requires a degree of guile and willingness to ab-sorb pain that Americans were ini-nally unprepared for in Somalia. The key is learning how in bend, how to wink and nod, how to pressure people indirectly and how to play factions off against one another. In his dealings with General Aidid, Admiral Jonathan Howe, the man overseeing the U.S. operation in Mogadishu, has been noticeably lacking in these instincts. There is something almost farcical about the notion of the United Nations issuing an arrest warrant for General Aidid in Mogadishn:

habeas corpus in Dante's Inferno. "We have no interest in denying anybody access to playing a role in Somalia's political future," Mr.

Clinton said, signaling his willing-ness to include General Aidid in a political solution provided he plays ball with the Americans. There is an old rabbinical saying: "Where there is truth there is on peace and where there is peace there is no truth." It is meant to convey the notion that gray compromises are what make daily life possible, and that is particularly true when nation-building in a place like Mogadishu.

On U.S. television, he called Haiti "a very hostile environment with people obviously killing each other." Leading, but Not by Enough Canadians Prefer Campbell to Her Party

By Clyde H. Farnsworth New York Times Service TORONTO — Kim Campbell still leads in public opinion polls as Canada's choice for prime public opinion pois as canada's choice for prime minister, but her personal popularity is failing to exert the poil needed for her Progressive Conserva-tive party to win a third term in voting on Oct. 25. An election campaign that is challenging the traditional power structure of this country of near-traditional power structure of this country of near-

Many political figures say Mrs. Campbell, the first woman to lead Canada, could also become a prime minister with one of the shortest tenures in the nation's history, because the campaign is al-ready half over and because of her mability to generate any momentum during four and a half hours of television debates. "It was an uphill struggle from the very beginning," said Lawrence LeDuc, a federal election alist at the University of Toronto. "They gave her too big a load to carry, including an incumbent government in power for nine years and pretty unpopular. The trick of changing leaders to stay in power only works in one out of five or six cases."

If this were a presidential election, her personal popularity might help her carry the day. As a politician with a relatively new political face and populist ideas about governing — she backs greater public participation, (ewer bureau-crats and smaller perks — she has touched responsive chords in the electorate.

Mrs. Campbell, 46, of British Columbia, is also a role model.

Yet under the parliamentary system, the office of prime minister goes to the leader of a party that gets a commanding presence in the House of Commons. Mrs. Campbell runs not in the country at large, but from her Vancouver district.

Liberals have been gaining ground as a party chiefly because of the weight of Tory baggage over nine years, including 11.3 percent unemployment and a still-rising federal budget deficit.

Bonn Court To Rule on Maastricht Objections

Renners

BONN - Germany's supreme court will make a ruling Tuesday that is almost certain to allow the last of the European Community's 12 member states to ratify the Maastricht Treaty on European Union.

But, ironically for a country at the heart of moves toward European unification. the court may impose conditions that could limit or alter the thrust of policies made in Bonn and Brussels.

Government officials say their informal soundings make them sure the Karlsruhe court will not align itself with 20 plaintiffs of various political bues to embarrass Bonn and prevent President Richard von Weizsäcker from signing the treaty.

But they also expect what the Süddeutsche Zeituog called "a mass of warnings, guidelines and instructions for the future."

instructions for the future." Germany has been forced into the 11th-hour defense of Maas-tricht by complaints by groups ranging from the nationalist right to the Greens, charging the treaty violates Bonn's constitution.

The court's eight judges have selected three exemplary complaints as the basis of their ruling. At the root of the suits is the belief that European union would usurp powers from Bonn, breaking the stitution. Leftist critics, including the Greens, have bttle fear for a national identity whose trappings - cur-rency, army and citizenship - are not especially dear to them. They say Maastricht fails to bal-ance out the enhanced powers of the EC's executive, the Commission, with extra leverage for the weak European Parliament. The Constitutional Court is widely expected to reflect several of these strands in its ruling. Government officials speculate

Craxi, in Reversal, Talks to Magistrate Meeting Called First of Many In Italy's Corruption Probe

By John Tagliabue

New York Tumes Service ROME - Bettino Craxi, a former prime minister who faces criminal corruption charges, has met with the Milao magistrate who is leading the investigation ioto Italy's corruption scandal, reversing his previous refusal to cooperate with investigating officials.

For Italians who thought it impossible for the buge scandal to widen, it appeared that Mr. Craxi would push the investigation in two new directions: against Italy's former Communist Party, which has been left until now virtually on the sidelines; and against major industrial concerns, like Fiat and Olivetti, which have posed as victims rather than accomplices io vast schemes io which immense kickbacks were paid to finance swollen political party bureaucracies and their patronage networks.

The meeting with Judge Antonio Di Pietro, the chief investigator. was remarkable since Mr. Craxi, who was forced to resign earlier this was remarkatore since with Crack, who was forced to resign earlier that year after leading the Socialist Party for nearly 17 years, has until now denounced the investigation, arguing that illegal financing was common to all Italy's parties, and refused to cooperate with Judge Di Pietro, accusing him of perpetrating a witch-hunt against the Social-istee and that leaders ists and their leaders.

Enzo Lo Giudice, Mr. Craxi's lawyer, said after the meeting on Saturday that it would be the "first in a long series" that would focus on "all the parties and major businessm

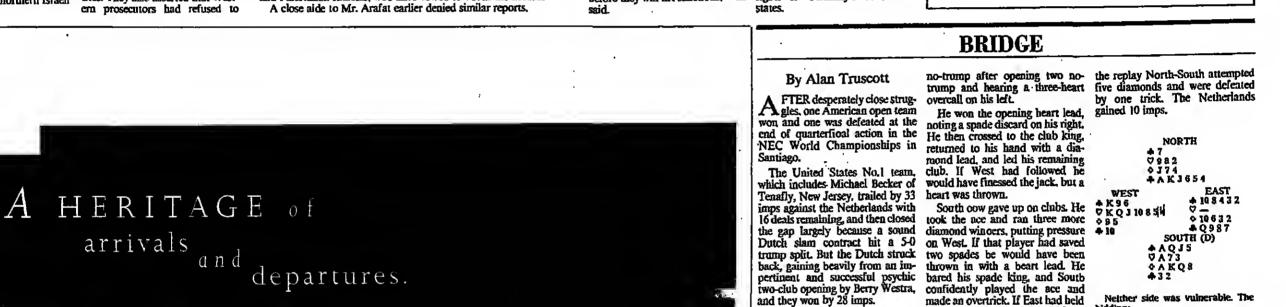

Mr. Craxi's reversal comes at a crucial time. More negative news about Italy's mainstream parties could further increase the vote for protest groups, like the separatist Northern League, in early national elections which are expected in the spring. The meeting was apparently the result of long negotiations between Mr. Craxi's lawyers and Judge Di Pietro, but it remained unclear what induced Mr. Craxi to reverse his refusal, or whether he was offered concessions for his cooperation. Little was revealed of the content of their discussion, but in an interview last week with the newsweekly Espresso, Mr. Lo Giudice said that Mr. Craxi would waot to discuss Communist Party financing and the role of major corporations, most numbly the Fiat automaker and the Olivetti electronics concern, in getting government favors for illegal payments.

Italy's Communist Party, now known as the Democratic Party of the Left, has remained reladively unscathed by the investigations. Until now, only minor officials have been tainted, and the party leader, Achille Occhetto, has insisted that the party was outside the illegal collectioo schemes. In recent weeks, however, investigations have intensified in the Emilia-Romagna region, long a Communist stronghold, into alleged kickbacks involving cooperatives in the farming and construction sectors. In a speech to Parliament in August, Mr. Craxi accused the Communists of profiting for decades from the activities of large Italian multinationals in formerly Communist Eastern Europe, under schemes whereby the Communist-run governments there accorded preferential treatment to Italian companies, sopulating in return that contributions, usually illegal, be funneled to the Italian Communists.

Do Without Nuclear Tests

President François Mitterrand of France tions are needed to improve warhead safety, had the right response to China's reckless test of a nuclear warhead last week: he urged other nuclear-armed states to "keep their cool" and not follow suit. President Bill Clinton would be wise to take his advice. The spread of nuclear arms to states that do not yet have them would pose much more menace to U.S. security than would a new Chinese warhead. That is why ending the U.S. moratorium on testing would be a mistake; it would only weaken worldwide support for tighter restraints oo proliferation Unfortunately, Mr. Clinton, in response to the Chinese test, ordered the Department of Energy to prepare for a resumption of testing next year. But he prudently deferred a final decision. A decision to test would take the heat off China, which faces rising global criticism for its explosion. Worse yet, American testing would embolden those in Russia who want to resume testing. And a new round of nuclear blasts would shatter hopes for a negotiated test ban and would cloud the climate for stronger anti-proliferation measures.

There is no convincing ratiocale for new U.S. tests. That is clear from a recent Navy report, which questions whether test detona to assure that the warheads remain reliable or to assess the effects of nuclear explosions.

--Q

American weapons laboratories contend that testing is needed to assure the safety of warheads on the Navy's Trident-2 missile and the Air Force's Minuteman-3. But the Navy says concern about Trident warheads has been alleviated by loading missiles and warheads separately into its submarines. And the Air Force discounts the safety risk of its remaining Minuteman-3 warheads.

The weapons labs also contend that warheads have to be tested to certify that warheads of slightly different manufacture will perform reliably without much variation in explosive force. The Navy report dismisses that concern, concluding that warheads are "comfortably tolerant of the small variations in materials and manufacture." As for weapons effects, experts say these can be gauged through simulations, based on the vast body of experience accumu-lated over the past 942 American tests, Findings like these persuaded Energy Secretary Hazel O'Leary to favor continuing the moratorium. They should be just as persuasive to Mr. Clinton.

It's Up to South Africans

It was fitting that the United Nations Gen-eral Assembly lifted economic sanctions against South Africa on Friday without long speeches or even a lormal vote. The siege of South Africa bad effectively ended days before with the quick and favorable international response to Nelsoo Mandela's long-awaited appeal to drop the ban. Still, South Africa's conversion oo the world stage from that of outcast to universally accepted emerging democracy was proper and richly deserved.

Mandelo's call was triggered by the Mr. I vote in the South African parliament setting the stage for a historic democranic election on April 27 and expected black majority rule. But neither the vote creating a multiracial Transi-tional Executive Council nor the United Nations' symbolic response to President F. W. de Klerk's government is expected to immediately usher in a flood of badly needed foreign investments. Even with the removal of restric-tions on U.S. Export-Import Bank loans, and of the sanctions on the books of more than 150 state and local governments in the United States, the question of foreign capital flows will turo less on international goodwill toward a new South Africa than on internal conditions created by its new leaders.

That makes it all the more important for the multiparty ocgotiators to draft a oew constitution as well as to lay the groundwork for election results that are widely accepted. Equally important, it means that those holding the reins of power during the transitional phase must get a handle on the escalaring violence, political uncertainty and growing racial fears and polarization. These can choke off job-creating capital as much as global sanctions ever could.

South Africans, with the sanctions issue behind them, must now confront fundamental socioeconomic and economic problems that are too enormous for politicians alone to solve. These issues are equally beyond the reach of foreign well-wishers, although foreign assistance, investments and trade can help. To be sure, South Africa must assure prospective investors that the investment climate is safe, predictable and profitable. But the key signal for foreign investors to invest will come from the actions of South Africa's own investors. Similarly, foreign friends can help to see South Africa into democracy, but it folls to South Africans themselves to lead the assault on apartheid's awful legacies. - THE WASHINGTON POST.

Another Chance for Bhutto

In 1988, Benazir Bbutto became the first woman to lead a government in an Islamic country. But in nearly two years as Pakistan's prime minister she impressed neither friend nor foe. Her Pakistan People's Party failed to enact a single measure of any consequence. Dismissed from office by a hostile president on charges of abuse of power, Miss Bbulto was beaten at the polls by Nawaz Sharif. But last Wednesday, in a dramatic comeback, her left-of-center party outvoted Mr. Sharif's This is sweet vindication for Benazir Bhutto, and for the most part good news for Pakistan. The big losers were militant Islamic parties, which won only nice seats in the 217seat National Assembly. After years of dictatorship and turbulence. Pakistan seems to be evolviog a stable two-party system. Mr. Sharif has emerged as a leader in his own right, and can no longer be dismissed as a tool of the military. If Miss Bhutto can oubble together a majority coalition, she will have a promising fresh shot at power. The less good oews for Pakistan and Miss Bbutto was the low turnout in a country fed up with political cupidity and demagoguery. So fed up, in fact, that Pakistan's most popular leader since July has been Moeen Qureshi, a little-known World Bank vice president who was chosen by the military to lead a caretaker government. He imposed tough but sensible economie policies, exposed loans from state banks to political insiders, closed down unneeded embassies and abolished 15 ministries. Boldest of all, be instituted a tax on big landed estates, like that of the Bbutto family, at 10,000 acres (4,000 hectares).

During the campaign, Miss Bhutto, like ber rival, promised vast public works without say-ing how they would be financed. Sounding last May, and Hun Sen, whose Camn pop tax on rich landowners. She must now deal with a formidable array of foes and problems: ethnic and religious discord, restless generals, drug barons, the human and physical debris of the Afghan war, and the memories of her own father, overthrown in 1977 and executed two years later. And finally, there is the ongoing argument with Washington and New Delhi over nuclear weapons and Kashmir. In a revealing New Yorker magazine profile hy Mary Anne Weaver, Miss Bhutto warmly extols Margaret Thatcher: "She has political conviction; she is not an opportunist, and she doesn't test the wind ... I admire her singlemindedness." For all ber grit and brilliance, Miss Bhutto has yet to show that she shares those qualities. Now she has a second chance. - THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Somalia Stakes: Small for America, Big for Clinton

WASHINGTON — Bill Clinton believes that America's global leadership must now be rescued in the barren wastes of Somalia. He balances an elephant on a mouse. His speech on Thursday, with its air of world crisis, was more of an indictment of his administration's mismanagement of a small, incidental cooflict that it allowed to get out of hand than a national call to arms to ounfront a grave threat.

America's credibility and prestige are at stake whenever and wherever American presidents en-gage them. There is no permanent loss or permanent repair of the power that America ommands on the world scene, as Vietnam and Operation Desert Storm both proved. That is why presidents must choose carefully in committing that power when America's interests are not directly attacked. The stakes become what the president says they are, at least temporarily. Mr. Clinton defines the national choice in Somalia as leaving io dishonor or staying to protect American eredibility. That is a descrip-tion of the dilemma that no president should ever allow himself to be sucked into.

The "dishonor/credibility" dilemma is vague enough to let enemies and friends manipulate American purpose for their own ends. It inevita-bly invites the president to confuse his own political reputation with America's standing in the world. And it allows intangible, emotional factors to dictate the expenditure of valuable American lives and treasure.

There is no U.S. national interest at stake in Somalia beyond three intangibles created by the American presence there: U.S. reputation, the damage that American withdrawal does to Ameri-can allies and the United Nations, and the U.S. ability to avenge American losses. Those are seri-ous concerns. But they would not exist if American troops had never gone to Somalia and become engaged in a small war against a local rogue. So I think the president erred in getting the nation to this point. But even those of us who have been skeptical from the outset of the military aspects of the Somali operation cannot press for an immediate withdrawal of U.S. troops io the circumstances that Mr. Clintoo described.

The debate is about how America leaves, not whether America leaves. The choice Mr. Clinton has confronted Americans (and the world) with is leaving Somalia precipitously and callously or leaving in a cootrolled fashion that minimizes the damage already done. If Mr. Clinton and his advisers can successfully manage a last chance to achieve a realistic mix of goals and means in Somalia, the world will be better off than if America abandoned Somalia overnight.

Beneath Thursday's "We must draw the line" rhetoric was a fundamental acknowledgment by the president that no new world order or model for African democracy will come out of the modest increase in U.S. forces that be announced. His goal is now to give Somalia "a reasonable chance" to end its political chaos and perpetual starvation, He must stick to that reasonable measure.

He should also be modest about what America can reasonably expect to accomplish in the way of retribution against Mohammed Farrah Aidid and in deterring other international bandits. The prospects of accomplishing either are too uncertain to justify significant new loss of life by Americans or innocent Somalis. Revenge, while a powerful human emotion, is not a sustainable national interest or the basis for a wise policy. There comes a point at which the desire for retribution and the implauas when the cessite for reditionand the implain-sible notion that punishment will deter future Aidids must give way to a realistic assessment of the costs in American and Somali lives. The Somalis have a proverb that the president should consider as he sets limits on what American proops will now do in Somalia: "In the ocean, one does oot need to sow water." Somalis do not oeed Americans to rain violence and destruction down on them, any more than Americans need to travel halfway around the world to be urban policemen.

American objectives have vecred off course in Somalia as Presideot Clinton has been absorbed in domestic affairs and as his foreign policy advisers have failed to fashion a onherent approach in his absence. The one constant has been the refusal to devote political and diplomatic attention commensurate to the demands placed on American soldiers there.

Until now, the president has ignored the first law of politics: When you get yourself in a bole, stop digging. Now he plays the role of a movie onwboy brandishing his revolvers to cover his retreat as he backs out the saloon door.

A successful exit will require President Clinton's sustained attentioo and effort. His highprofile support for a regional diplomane solu-tion to be negotiated by Ambassador Robert Oakley is a good heat by Amassado Robert America's world leadership will eventually re-cover even if this administration flubs the exit and Somalia goes back to disaster. Bill Clinton's reputation for leadership would not. The Washington Post.

bodian People's Party came in second. This is not the best solution, but it is better than any other Cambodia has had in more than 20 years of civil war and revolution. And the credit for it lies with the United Nations.

The United Nations was in Cambodia to impose reconciliation on all the factions involved in the civil war and to set up national elections.

It must be said that the mission (about which f have written a film for the United Nations) was not perfect. The troops called for under the Paris Peace Agreement of 1991 were not all in place until the summer of 1992. Some of these troops and the United Nations' civilian police were undisciplined, and too many of its administrators were inadequately trained. Many criticisms of the UN mission.

sion. They were right. Right up until the election in May, the Khmer Rouge threatened to attack the polling stations. Munderous as-saults hy the Communist-dominated regime to Phnon Penh against its principal opponent, the royalist party, were also destabilizing. But the leaders of the mission held firm.

The broadcasts of the UN radio station, run hy an American diplomat, Timothy Carney, were crucial in con-vincing people that they could vote secretly and thus freely.

In the end, the Khmer Rouge did rant to understand democracy.

The majority voted for the royalist opposition. But the People's Party threatened to divide and destroy the country rather than surrender power. Finally, in Juoc, the 70-year-old Prince Sihanouk - the father of Prince Ranariddh and, for all his unpredictability, a symbol of unity - persuaded the royalists to accept a coalition with the People's Party. At least some power had been transferred peacefully, for the first time ever in Cambodia. Last month the newly elected

Russia: Much Like Weimar, but With a Fortunate Difference tics that the "stab in the back" did in the N EW HAVEN, Connecticut -In 1914, imperial Germany was the world's greatest military power. Four years later. Germany was defeated and burniliated. The kaiser abdicated and fled to exile. Soon a democratie government emerged, based on a con-stitution written in Weimar. The Weimar republic represented the dream of a peaceful, prosperous Germany participating in a cooperative world order - a world "safe for democracy." in the phrase of Woodrow Wilson.

After a decade and a half of economic, political and cultural turnoil, the Weimar dream turned into the nightmare of Adolf Hitler's Germany. Nascent democracy was replaced hy a dictatorship of terror. Diplomagave way to aggression. Before Hitler's Germany was defeated, tens of millions were killed in battle, were mardered in death camps or succumbed to disease and starvation.

Historians have asked what went wrong with Weimar. Could different decisions in Germany and different treatment of Germany by other coun-tries have preserved democracy and prevented World War II with its unprecedented horrors? Today there are parallels between post-Communist Russia and Weimar Germany. Russia, like Weimar, is beir to a defcated and humiliated military empire. Russia, like Weimar, has thrown over an authoritarian political system and has not discovered the path to stable, nonviolent democracy. Russia, like Weimar, is undergoing severe economic dislocation in which millions have lost the personal economic security that they once took for granted and a few are growing rich, often by questionable means.

Moscow, like Berlin in the Weimer era, has an iconoclastic artistic culture that is exciting for the young but decadent in the eyes of older, more traditional people. Crime and selfindulgence appear to have replaced order and community. In Russia, as in Weimar, there is a political under-Democratic Weimar Germany was class with extreme ideologies, prom-ising a totalitarian spiritual and military rebirth - and eager to eradicate all liberal tendencies in government, the economy and culture. The differences, for the most part, place Russia today in a more perilous condition than Weimar Germany in the 1920s. Germany had the excellent schools, good medical services, high managerial talent, modern industrial plant and efficient systems of communication and transportation necessary for economic revival. Germany was not plagued with discontentd, potentially separatist regions. And the leap from the quasi-de-mocracy of old imperial Germany to the institutions of Weimar was easy compared with the leap from the pervasive control of the Communist Party to the uncertainty of Russia today. Germany had lost some territory and overseas colonies after suffering defeat, but those losses were minuscule compared with the breakup of the Soviet empire of inner republics, satellites and dependent states. Only in one respect is Russia in a more advantageous position than Weimar - and therein lies one hope for a constructive, as opposed to a Hitlerian, Outcome.

During World War I, President Wilson had called for a peace settlement based on healing and reconciliation within a democratic framework rather than a vengeful peace imposed on a defeated Germany. The Germans made a sincere effort to establish democracy but they were nonetheless subjected to a bumiliating peace. Allied troops remained on German soil for three years after the end of the fighting. Germany was excluded until 1926 from membership in the League of Nations; eco-nomic punishments contributed to the devastating inflation of 1923.

treated as a second-class nation. All Germans felt the pain, Hitler offered a solution, terrifyingly effective in the short term, appalling in the long term. Finally, after 1945, the United States and its allies, as occupiers, were able to order democratic and economic re-forms and welcome Germany within a decade as a full international partner. Such an approach to the Soviet Union after the Cold War was mthinkable. It was not defeated in direct combat, and even had she been, outside occupation of a country so vast could not have worked as it did in Germany and Japan after World War II. Although largely defeated by interand corruption, repression and mis-management, the Soviet Union suf-fered the ultimate consequence of defeat: destruction as an empire. The United States and other Western powers could have responded with vengeance and punishment, gloating in the dissolution of the Soviet empire, beating the Russian remnant with economic and political sticks rather than holding out carrots. To their credit, Western leaders have approached Russia with sympathetic concern, trying to assist in its political, eco-nomic and military reforms. The failure of Western assistance to produce miracles in Russia is testimony to the size and complexity of the difficul-ties, not to a lack of goodwill.

But goodwill from the victors does not remove the pervasive sense of humiliation and loss of greal-power sta-tus. If the United States and other outside powers now say "The hell with it - Russia is bopeless," chances are that appeals roughly parallel to those by which Hitler destroyed Weimar Germany could become frighteningly effective in Russia. The possibility of a peaceful, stable Russia cooperating with other nations in the internation si realm could be lost,

President Boris Yeltsin has many immediate problems in bringing off credible parliamentary elections; campaigning fairly in the presidential election: dealing with potentially vioent opponents without destroying all political freedom; freeing the economy from its shackles. But Mr. Yeltsin, or any other leader, has to deal with the underlying sense of oational burniliation and with the connected need to maintain military security. The temptation to abandon cooperation and arms reduction and trumpet Russia's unilateral determination to protect its interests and restore its status is great and danger-ous for the world. Remember the ghosts of Weimar and Hitler.

President Yeltsin's problem is to find a way to restore Russia's sense of pride in international affairs without abandoning the path of cooperation. He must maintain the military power legitimately necessary for national security without having that power used to destroy democracy, dominate neighbors or restore the empire by force. It is in this arena, more than in direct advice on democratization or economie assistance, that the United States and other concerned nations can be most helpful.

A first reaction, observers said, would be a substantial strengthening of the Deutsche mark on the foreign exchange market and a weakening of bonds denominated in European Currency Units, the projected common currency. The mark rose as much as 1.6 percent in Europe last week against the lira, and its strength was attributed to traders moving out of Continental currencies as a precaution ahead of the Karlsruhe ruling. The mark's move was considered a foretaste of what is to come if the court rules unfavorably for Maastricht. The Ecu bond market also would suffer, but analysis believe the damage there would be less severe. The market took a big hit last damage there would be less severe. The market took a big hit last year after Denmark's initial rejection of the treaty, and analysts said institutional holdings of Ecu paper have not been rebuilt, leaving the market less exposed to a big sell-off. In addition, the current yield on Ecu paper is about 0.125 percentage point above the theoretical value, meaning the price is relatively low already. During the Ecu bond market's heyday early leaving under a solution what sends here and here a solution what here a solution here a solution what here a solution he last year, yields were substantially below what could be earned by purchasing bonds in the component currencies. That high-priced situation left the sector terribly exposed when the first signs emerged that the road to monetary union was uncertain.

Nevertheless, any market upset this week would probably com-plicate the issuance plans of the EC Commission. The EC executive will be tapping international capital markets to finance a promised loan to Italy. The plan is to issue 1 billion Ecns of seven-year bonds and 1.9 billion DM of paper whose maturity has not yet been fixed.

The timing of Hungary's maiden issue in French francs could also suffer. The central bank plans to raise I billion francs via an offering of five to seven years. The Hungarian offering, led by Credit Lyonnais, is expected to be priced at 2.35 percentage points

U.S. Holds Fast on GATT Kantor Unimpressed by French Overture

Agence France Press

WASHINGTON -- The United States blunthy responded to a softened French position on stalled trade talks over the weekend, refusing to renegotiate an accord signed with the EC but opposed by Paris that would limit farm subsidies.

Paris that would hunt farm substates. "Our position remains absolutely unchanged," a spokeswoman for U.S. Trade Representative Mickey Kantor said Saturday, referring to the so-called Blair House accord on cutting agricultural subsidies.

The U.S.-EC agreement is considered key to a broader agreement to liberalize world commerce under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

The spokeswoman was responding to comments by Foreign Minister Alain Juppé of France, who signaled a softening of his country's all-or-nothing stance on a GATT deal. Mr. Juppé suggested reaching a partial accord before the existing Dec. 15 deadline and leaving the toughest issues, such as agriculture, for later. Breaking with France's traditional line that noth ing could be agreed until everything was agreed, Mr. Juppe suggested the thorniest issues need not delay agreement on the rest of a GATT package. "Let's think about what could be settled on Dec.

15 and what could be deferred to a second round of negotiations," he told reporters at a meeting of the Council of Europe in Vienna. But the U.S. spokeswoman said the Americanposition would not change, with Washington still seeking to conclude the Uruguay Round of GATT talks on schedule and refusing to renegotiate the Blair House agreement, named for the Washington guest residence where it was signed last November. Mr. Juppé continued to insist the Blair House accord still had to be "substantially modified." The U.S. spokeswoman, asked specifically if the United States might accept a partial agreement if talks hit a wall, refused to comment until she could consult with Mr. Kantor. But another source close to the U.S. administration said it was unlikely

But it is rather regrettable that here we are in very difficult negotiations on the Uruguay Round and we have something hanging over them like a cloud which most people thought had been resolved in November after years of debate between the EC and the U.S. It is lamentable that we are in this situation.

Analysts looking for an explanation for Swe-den's unprecedentedly high unemployment figures have lately hit upon some novel causes. of 40 percent this year. Officials in the two-year-old center-right government claim much of the credit, citing their zealous efforts to end decades of "One of the major reasons for unemployment is that suddenly in the recession people got healthy and started showing up for work," explained Bo Selling, manager at James Capel & Co's office in Stockhohn.

The apparent improvement in people's health is explained largely by the fact that the government cut back support payments for illness.

In a country where worker rolls for decades were fattened by the need to compensate for chronic absenteeism, the rediscovery of the work ethic has proven disastrous. Faced with a sudden surfeit of staff, in many cases more than there was even room to accommodate, employers had little choice but to dismiss many workers.

Officials blame one out of every four job losses -and some economists believe unemploment will -and some economists oraceve mempionient will hit 15 percent next year — simply on Swedes' sudden eagements to turn up for work every day. Another lurch in a scenningly virtuous direction has produced similarly dire results. "Swedes have made themselves memployed by saving," said Nils Lundgren, chief economist at Nordbanken.

Comforted by cradle-to-grave services from a nurturing state. Swedes had long spent their wages with abandon. With the government now strug-gling to scala back its costly array of services, and with the national pension plan in trouble, Swedish workers have started saving with a vengeance. In the process, one-fifth of the demand for goods and services has been swept away and employers have responded with yet more waves of job cuts.

In Sweden as elsewhere, once employers take out their knives it is hard to stop them from slashing indefinitely. "Measures that are difficult to take when things are going well find much greater accep-tance in the midst of a crisis," noted Curt Olsson, chairman of Skandinaviska Enskilda Banken, or SE Banken, Sweden's largest commercial bank.

Bless That Devaluation

Mention polls showing that only 37 percent of voters think things are getting better, and politi-cians in most countries will wince and change the subject. Perhaps it can be laid to Swedes' reputation as something other than wide-eyed optimists, but Swedish officials last week seized on such a poll, calling the figures encouraging indeed.

"We felt a big change in artitude in the sum-mer," said Bo Lundgren, Sweden's minister for liscal and financial affairs. He noted that in polls late last year, only 12 percent of Swedes harbored hopes of a brighter economic future.

In the midst of the deepest economic crisis to hit Sweden since the Depression, with the Swedish economy 10 percent smaller than it was three years ago and shrinking, confidence is soaring, oddly.

Encouraged by steep fails in interest rates and a 20 percent devaluation in the krona, Swedish in-vestors have pushed share prices up by an average ernment is scheduled to give its first estimate of third-quarter growth.

The growth rate is the driving element because on it hangs expectations of whether and how much the Federal Reserve Board can be expected to change short-term interest rates. If growth stays disappointing — climinating hopes of a near-term rate increase — the dollar can be expected to take a hit.

The dollar traded in a tight range against the yen thanks to lavish int-ervention by the Bank of Japan. Traders said it was desperately rying to avoid strengthening of the yea, which, by pushing up export prices, would complicate govern-ment efforts to stimulate growth. Interest will continue to be paid in 1993 by profitable parts of the Ferruzzi empire, notably its energy company Edison SpA and Francebased Eridania-Beghin Say SA, which is where much of the foreign bank debt is held. Further, a 800 billion lire fund will be set up to finance deht repayment to banks

China Inches Toward a Single Currency Rate

BELJING - China will standardize rates at its foreign exchange swap centers this year in a first step toward unifying the official and market rates for the yuan, an official was quoted as saying on Sunday. China has more than a dozen regional swap centers where businesses are allowed to trade yuan for foreign money at market-set rates.

"A uniform quotation mechanism across the nation will possibly take the Shanghai rate as the standard," said Li Zhongzhou, deputy director general for international rela-tions at the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade.

Mr. Li, in remarks published Sunday in the official newspaper China Daily, did not give details on how the rates would be standardized or how swap centers would be linked in setting the price.

Although rates differ now from place to place, most swap centers trade one dollar at about 3.8 yuan, compared with an official exchange rate of about 5.8.

Black markets give an even greater premi-um for collars. The rate soared as high as 10 yuan per dollar earlier this year amid conflicting rumors about the fate of China's currency reforms.

Mr. Li said the decision to standardize swap center rales would help China abolish the dual-track currency system and ultimately make the yuan freely convertible on world markets. Currently, the yuan cannot be bought or sold in most of the world. Beijing officials, campaigning hard for admission into the General Agreement on Tar-iffs and Trade, have promised that the re-torms will be implemented within the next five years. "We will strive to shorten the period as much as possible," Mr. Li was quoted as saying "But we cannot give a specific timetable now," he said. "It hinges upon the performance of China's economy and foreign exchange reserves." Vice Finance Minister Jin Renging last month set off a round of anxious speculation by saying China would merge the two rates next year, but Sunday's China Daily said Mr. Li declined to confirm this.

"He did not comment on speculation that China was likely to converge the official and market foreign exchange rates by next year." the newspaper said. A sudden devaluation of the renminbi to bring the two rates into line could devastate tottering state industries, which rely on cheap foreign exchange for imports. Economists say conservatives in the Beijing leadership oppose the move.

China Wraps Quota-Dodgers The China Daily also reported that Beijing has punished three enterprises for exporting Chinese-made textiles to the United States using false "Made in Taiwan" labels, Bloomberg reported from Beijing. Last month Washington threatened to cut the quota of Chinese textiles it allows into the U.S. market if Beijing did not stem a flood of billions of dollars of mislabeled exports.

Shanghai Tea, a subsidiary of the China National Native Produce and Animal By-Product Corp., and Guangdong's Sihui Wei Fat Knitwear Co. had their export rights suspended for a year and illegal income was confiscated, the paper said. Xiamen Bei An Knitwear Co. was also punished.

The announcement points up China's de-termination to root out illegalities that have caused trade skirmishes with the United States," the state-run paper said. Ministry of Foreign Trade and Economic Cooperation officials told the paper that those directly involved in the illegal deals would be "severely punished." Factories in the sectory punished."

Factories in the regions where the firms are based would have their 1994 textile quotas cut, it said.

Products falsely labeled and shipped through third countries to dodge quota re-strictions accounted for a third of China's S6 million textile exports to the United States last year, the office of the U.S. Trade Representative estimates.

Singapore Telecom WORLD STOCKS IN REVIEW Prices Flotation

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches SINGAPORE - Singapore Telecommunications Ltd., releasing long-awaited details over the weekend of its initial public offering, said the 550 million shares available to foreigners would be sold at or above 2 Singapore dollars ($1.27) a share. The huge public offering, the largest in Singapore's history, will increase the capitalization of the Singapore stock market by about 20 percent. The company already represents almost 25 percent of the local exchange's current capitalization of 134 billion Singapore dollars ($85.3 billion). The flotation will initially offer a total of 1.1 billion shares, or a 7.3

percent stake in the company, but management said it may offer up to Agence France-Presse HONG KONG - The Hong Kong stock exchange, now open 3.5 hours a day, is considering longer hours to draw more business from Europe, its chief executive was quoted Sunday as saying.

Paul Chow said the market, where the blue-chip Hang Seng Index punched through the 8,000 barrier last week, could be open at least five hours a day beginning in April, the Sunday Morning Post reported.

The exchange is currently open from 10:00 A.M. to 12:30 P.M. and again from 2:30 P.M. to 3:30 P.M. By staying open as late as 5:00 P.M., 9:00 A.M. London time, the exchange could compete with its main rival, the London stock exchange, which now accounts for 17 percent of the trading in Hong Kong companies that are listed there.

Stocks currently listed in both Hong Kong and London include HSBC Holdings PLC and Jardine Matheson Holdines Lid.

Mr. Chow said the longer hours would follow introduction of an automated trading system on Nov, J.

the high end of most analysts' estimates. Yamaichi Securities said this week that it was expecting a pri-ce/carnings ratio of 24 to 25, while a Lum Chang Securities report last week predicted a ratio above 28. Applications for the shares will close at noon on Oct. 28, and trading will begin on Nov. 1. Two other categories of shares will be made available only to Singaporeans. The first will be priced at 1.90 Singapore dollars, and the second will cost 2 dollars. As part of a massive government campaign to encourage Singapore citizens to invest in stocks, buyers of the shares will get a 45 percent discount in the form of bonus shares. given in installments over a six-year period. They must hold the shares for six years to get the full discount. Analysts said the flotation should stimulate financial activity and enhance the market's appeal. "Currenlly, a few sectors like banks and ship repair dominate the bourse," an analyst from a Britisb securities house said. "ST will be a good proxy for the economy, It has a huge market capitalization against other local blue chips."

"The huge cash call is expected to lead to some churning and bring in new interest to the market," said ERM: No Return to Narrow Bands Any Time Soon, EC Ministers Decide Sunil Gupta, an analyst at Crosby Securities Research Director.

Analysts said the market had suffered less than usual from the recent Russian upheaval, yet the end of the crisis triggered a strong uptrend. The stock market was also boosted by euphoria among bond investors, they added. Even though the Bundesbank did not lower interest rates at its latest meeting, the investors are said to expect the central bank to make a gesture in the near future. Hans Tietmeyer, the new central-bank president, has said he would continue his predecessor's policy of "cautious rate reductions.

Hopes of a cut in British interest rates, higher-than-expected growth in the M-0 money supply (which rose 0.4 percent in September from August) and the strength of the futures market all helped the trend, Vouchers, for variable amounts, have been issued to 3.5 milli. Moldovans and can be used to huy n stake in any of the 1,595 state-run enterprises the former Soviet republic aims to sell by the end of 1994. Saturday's sale netted 215 million Moldovan coupons ($99,000). It was attended by World Bank officials who told reporters earlier that the success of the auction would determine the granting to Moldova of a restructuring loan worth $60 million.

Vouchers were allotted to citizens under a system adding together the number of years worked in Moldova and a five-year bonus. A Moldovan who had worked for 10 years would have a 15-year voucher. The government's privatization department has said the value of each yearunit counted in the vouchers was 16,000 coupons, or 2,170 to the dollar.

Jean-Louis Levrean, the French club's deputy chairman, had said Saturday that Marseille will soon sell two players to overcome the financial crisis that has followed Olympique's expulsion from the European Cup.

Tapic said on television the $13 million he hopes to get for Boksic from the Italian chub Lazio would cover Marseille's deficit.

"It scared me to death, I couldn't move my legs at all," Barkley, ap-pearing visibly shaken, said some 90 minutes later Saturday night. "It was like my legs started going into the floor. I couldn't lift my feet."

Barkley fell onto his shoulder during wind sprints following a spirited, 60-minute scrimmage.

From the Avant-Garde, a Long, Pretty Look

By Suzy Menkes International Herald Tribune

PARIS — Imagine a woman's body undulating through light veils of chiffon, the dress slithering downward, its hipline snaked with seams. In a cocktail of colors, absiothe chiffon is mixed with lime. That is the new look for next summer.

For fashion at the cutting edge, the weekend shows were pretty sharp. And pretty is the new message from members of the Paris avant-garde, who have scissored a long, soft silhouette using airy fabrics in dusty pastel colors,

The witty and refreshing collection sent out by the British designer John Galliano was the weekend's high point. But throughout the shows, the mood was romaotic with a whiff of decadence. The focus was on the fragile empire dress, worn with hief vests, soft pants or a second wispy layer on top. Hemlines were long. The jacket, except as a soft shirt, was in retreat.

Galliano's collection was an unfolding narrative.

To a soundtrack of howling wolves, out came erinolined ladies, distracted and in dishahille, with tiny silken bodices and lacy tops clutched to the bosom above the hoopla skirts. Where were they goiog? To a Scottish castle, where they emerged in teeny lace kilts revealing tartan underpants. After cavorting in polka-dot, pajama-soft pantsuts and slips of dresses, our heroines left for Russia, in military greatcoats powdered with appliques of snowy lace. Then came bias-cut dresses of snowy face. Then came bias-cut dresses that curied around the body like smoke. Galliano is the first designer to combine British imagination and eccentricity with divine fashion madoess and technique on the heroic French scale.

Everything was cut on the bias: curving jackets flipping out above swing-high skirts and dresses inset with revealing sheer chiffon. It looked simple. It was complex and masterful. And that is the essence of modern fashion. At Comme des Garcons, the designer Rei Kawakubo had turned romantic. With the models' hair sculpled into powdery curls, she showed how a woman can look soft hut strong. The paradox was symbolized by solid sleeves grafted onto feather-light dresses, a reprise from Comme's winter collection.

Kawakubo's forceful prettiness focused on the dress, bias-cut, cupping the bosom below narrow shoulders and above a raised waist. Mesh knits and apron-dresses were gauzy and transparent in a way that was tender and never vulgar. It was a fine collection with a spirit of screnity.

Yohji Yamamoto seemed stuck in a dark tunnel of oegativism and despair. Just occasionally his show of black-clad models flickered with sunlight: a light skirt hand-painted with leaves; a gossamer-fine sweatet, or Yamamoto's signature white shirt elongated to a dress. A navy pea coat was finely tailored; there was a delicate play on tones of white. But the choice of fabrics — fibrous cottons and thick T-shirt material — made dresses leaden rather thao liquid. The heaviness was summed up by the feet: Cinderella's glass slippers as plastic clogs as stiff as a block of ice.

Ann Demeulemeester showed prettiness in a minor key. Her whey-faced models strayed out in skinny jackets with small shoulders and drooping cuffs or with camisole-vests dangling open over high-waist dresses.

Demeulemeester's ascetie look had been prettied up with a faded print of flowers, glearning panne velvet jackets and turn-of-the century colors: taupe, dove gray and laurel green. The show iovented nothing, but it expressed a poetic innocence. The pursuit of prettiness was even the story from fashion's uncompromising minimalisi, Helmut Lang.

At his show Sunday, he had splashes of sugar pink on his candy-wrapper-sheer dresses, and his signature aprons were made in checks like a take on a tea towel.

He was still focusing on transparency, simplicity and plays on shiny textures. But in a show that was as much about attitude as clothes, Lang had moved on, even swappiog flat shoes for shiny high heels. The husband-and-wife team of Mariot

The husband-and-wife team of Mariot Chanet — Michele and Olivier Chatenet have an interesting background: She worked for Comme des Garçons and Chanel; he with Thierry Mugler and Azzedine Alaïa.

Together, they have created a modern look by wrapping and draping envelope-flat dresses to the body, lavering them with simple knits. They also caught the current mood with their crumpled cotton crepe. Noppy tulle and viscose and with faded pastels in mauve, yellow, absinthe and aqua.

Martin Margiela, the founding father of fashion recycling, took that factic to its ultimate conclusion: He showed a line created entirely from his work since 1989, Models, with the dates of each outfit

Models, with the dates of each outfit stamped on their necks, lined up against the wall of an ahandoned movie theater. The original clothes — a long patchwork skirt, a tattoo-patterned gauzy top, a boiled wool sweater or a mesh over-dress — had all been given a secood life by being dyed gray. They bad worn well.

The decadent prettiness of fashion's avantgarde is for a new generatioo. Will grown-up women buy it?

Vogue's editor, Anna Wintour, at least, was already wearing. Galliano's dove-gray crepe dress and taut, tiny white leather jacket at the party she gave for the photographer Ellen Von Unwerth,

LANGUAGE

The Battle of Rhetorical Gap

By William Safire

WASHINGTON — At a meeting with the presideot in the Cabinet Room, with mouth-filling words like multilateral and multinational flying around, a senator wondered if they weren't losing touch with the words that real people use to everyday life.

That off-the-record remark about our language was promptly leaked to this department. At a subsequent interview with President Clinton, I asked about it.

"Today I think that we still doo't speak in a language that ordinary Americans can understand." Clintoo replied. He believed that the diplomatic lingo we oow use fails to "support the kind of bipartisan engagement that I'm convinced the United States has to have." Io this president's phrase (bottomed on "the missile gap" charge by candidate John Kennedy in 1960), the nation has been presented with the problem of "a rhetorical gap."

Apparently this presidential discontent registered on his staff. The need to reject the no-longer-pertinent language of the Cold War — from Lenin's peaceful coexistence to Churchill's iron curtain to George Kennan's containment — reached the writers io the White House basement who are working on national security affairs. How do you go about building a new vocabulary? You start with a single word.

The cbosen word is enlargement. In a seminal speech to the School of Advanced Ioternational Studies of Johns Hopkins University, Anthony Lake, national security adviser to the president, used the noun enlargement or the verb enlarge 20 times. I take that to be a subtle signal that the word is intended to be associated with the approach the Clinton administration is taking to Ioreign affairs. Here are 2 of the 20 drumbeats: "The successor to a distribution of containment must be a strategy of enlargement, the enlargement of the world's free community of market democracies."

Secretary of State Warren Christopher, however, in a speech the same week, resisted enlargement, preferring engagement, a word put forward in the '80s hy Gary Hart and later by James Baker. Io "the latest rouod io a century-old debate between engagement and isolationism," the secretary said, "the United States chooses engagement."

The choice was once posed as between intervention and isolation; however, interventionists were able to shuck that label, with its hawkish and jingoistic connotations, in favor of internationalist. Meanwhile, isolatiooists remained with their heads in the sand; the slogan "America First" carries too much pre-World War II baggage. Anti-interventionists have failed to choose a label for themselves, so they are stuck with isolationist, choseo by their adversaries.

The intervention crowd, baving had success in the containment era, and alert to the pejorative nature of involvement or entanglement, has long been keery of interventionist and worries that internationalist sounds too U.N.-y.

Should it choose engagement or enlargement? This question is evidently rolling the waters between the White House basement and Foggy Bottom; though the Christopher-Lake-Albright speeches were policy-coordinated, what Clinton called the "rhetorical gap" was not closed. I'm all for a new word to describe America's role in the world, hut somehow enlargement doesn't do it for me. First, there is the connotation of swelliog: enlargement of the spleen or the prostate comes to mind. Then we have the photographic sense, with its synonym of "hlowup"; surely that is not what diplomats seek. Clinton may want to grow the economy, as he says frequently, but are we metaphorically ready to grow democracy? Is a generation that celebrates Robert Browning's "less is more" ready for a oew enlargement policy?

No; let us eschew this slapsy maxi. As a cardcarrying intervenor (my preference as a human-rights hawk). I vote for engagement — not only because of its dim naval-battle origin, with inherent rules, but also for its previous commercial associatioo with the loveliness and success derived from cleansing cream: "She's lovely: "She's engaged: she uses Pond's."

lovely: she's engaged; she uses Pond's." The president is undecided. In his United Nations speech, he said the United States "plans to remain engaged" and also "we seek to enlarge the circle of nations" with free institutions.

The Battle of Rheiorical Gap continues to rage.

The economy is a bread-and-butter issue, al least among pundits oot worried about cholesterol: aborulon and gun control are hot-button issues; NAFTA, causing splits within each party, is a wedge issue. What kind of issue is health care reform?

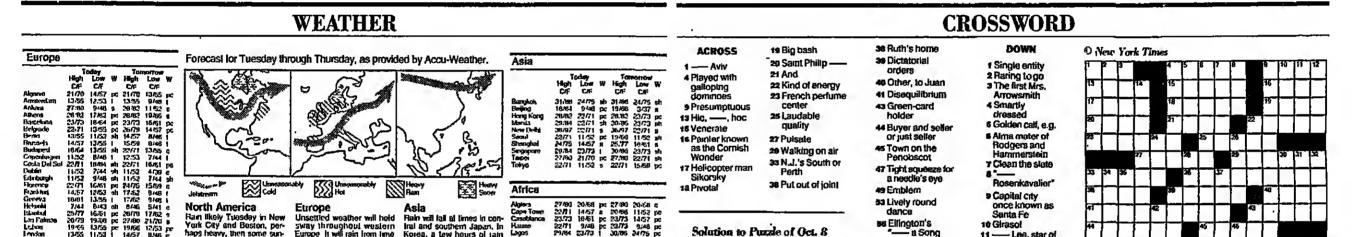

It's a kitchen-table issue. For the provenance of this locution, I turned to Dialog Information Services in Iselin, New Jersey, the computer library that provides access to some 400 data bases.

In a Boston Globe poll reported on July 15, 1984, a category of likely voters was described thus: "Understands and cares about kitchen table usues," and that phrase was defined as "the problems that everyday working people face in trying to make ends meet." In 1988, Judy Mann of The Washington Post wrote that Sarah Harder, presideot of the American Association of University Women, believed that "women will be voting kitchen table issues in the 1988 election. Not women's issues, oot hread and butter issues, but kitchen table usues. They come,' said Harder, 'from the center of family life.' "The writer cited caregiving as one example of the issue; others are education, use of leisure time and, of course, healtb.

A bread-and-batter issue focuses exclusively on economics: "Can we afford this or oot?" A kitchen-table issue asks, more broadly, "What's best for the family, and how can we work it out?" The locution covers a sociopolitical as well as an economic range, and fulfills a linguistic need; with the first two words hyphenated as befits a compound adjective modifying the noun issue, it should be part of the comprehensive basic issue package that cannot be taken away.
